

Biographical details

Eileen Munro is Professor of Social Policy at the London School of Economics. Professor Munro has written extensively on how best to combine intuitive and analytic reasoning in child protection risk assessment and decision-making and also on the importance of understanding how systems' factors influence workers' actions.

In 2011, she completed the Munro Review of the English Child Protection System. She has since been working with Andrew Turnell helping ten local authorities in England effect whole system re-design to support Signs of Safety practice with families.
